THEOLO-TWEET

Written by Yianni Magoulas

A key component in today's society is social media. We are asked to "follow" our friends' profiles and "like" their posts. The idea of following is quite interesting. We make a conscious effort to go to their page, click the little blue button, and become engaged in their posts. We are also called to follow Christ. It might not be by clicking a blue button, but it is a conscious effort. Following Christ is not something we see, like our friends' posts, it is something we do. We follow Christ by how we live our lives. Ask yourself; am I friendly to the kid that is always bullied, am I supportive of my fellow students, am I respectful of my parents and teachers? Christ gives us a New Commandment, to "Love one another". The first saints were not theologians or scholars, they were fishers and tax collectors, they were men and women who gave their lives to Christ. The core principles of the Church are very simple: they are practical rules of how to be a good person. By following the teachings of our faith, we follow Christ.
